Gov. Cox's inaugural address is limited to a declaration of general principles that governs affairs, and a statement of a political problem to be worked out, but does not lay down specific measures for accomplishing these objects. He says the one great doctrine which has been settled by the war is that the National Union cannot be destroyed by the action of any of the States composing it, but the continuance of its modifications, or the dissolution, shall be determined by the whole people acting as one nation under forms of the Federal Constitution, and shows the absurdity of raising the question already settled by the high arbitrament of the ration, and putting it in jeopardy before a trial by jury. The Governor concludes by saying that the late war has brought great burdens upon our State, but its prosperity has been such that they have been borne without impoverishing or straining public resources. Ohio, the first born of the ordinance of 1787, has been true to the principles of that great act of statesmanship which dedicated the great northwestern territory to freedom and free labor, and now more than ever before is realizing the benefits of the wisdom which then isunched her upon a carrier of timexampled growth under the auspices of religious intelligence and freedom.

Great Betain.—Further diplomatic correspondence between Mr. Adams and the British Foreign Secretary is published respecting the Sea King or Shenandosh. Under date of November 21st, Mr. Adams says he is instructed to state that the proposition of Her Majesty's Government for creating a joint committee is respectfully declined. On December 2d Earl Clarendon writing to Mr. Adams, says: Her Majesty's Government consider that no advantage can result from prolonging the controversy of which the topics are fully exhausted, but which might possibly, if continued, introduce ceremony into the relation of England and the United States. Earl Clarendon persists, however, in asserting that England has never deviated from her duties as a neutral power, and he declares how strongly Her Majesty's Government.

sists, however, in asserting that England has never deviated from her duties as a neutral power, and he declares how strongly. Her Majesty's Government and the people of England desire to be in close friendship with the United States neutrality. This correspondence leaves the question of American claims in England suspended.
